* This additional bearing is particularly illustrative of an augmentation of honour, which was given as a reward by King Henry VIII. to Thomas, Earl of Surrey, for his great and signal valour, in defeating James IV. King of Scotland, who, at the head of 50,000 men, had entered England, ravaged part of Northumberland, and was met by the Earl in Huddon-Field, with little more than one half the number, where the Scotch king was totally defeated and slain; but notwithstanding this heroic conduct, for which he was likewise raised to the Dukedom of Norfolk, he afterwards fell under the jealousy of the king, was attainted of treason, and became a sacrifice to false suggestions, and implacable resentment.
